BRITISH TROOPS OCCUPY

ISLAND OF HERM

LONDON, November 23 (4:13 P. M.).

The Island of Herm, off the Guernsey coast, which is less than one square mile in area, has been occupied by British troops as a precaution against possible use by Germany. Some time ago, an agitation was started on the ground that the island was leased to Prince von Bluecher, a doscondant of the famous German commander. A wireless station found there shortly after the outbreak of the war was destroyed.

Reginald McKenna, Home Secretary, explained in the House of Commons that a German company had leased the island as far back as 1889. This company in turn leased it to Prince von Bluecher. The island has been in spected, Mr. McKenna said, and no specific to the international law, is practically rendered illusory, whereby the install process of the same for the surveys of the desired on the same footing as absolute contraband."

Contained," it says, "in the rule concerning conditional contraband, it conditional contraband except where cargo is destined for use of the administrative departments or the military force of the hostile powers," nor can the question arise whether goods are conditional contraband or not "when the vessel is sailing for a neutral port."

Further, it charges Great Britain made the rule of continuous voyage, applicable also with regard to conditional contraband, in contraband, applicable also with regard to conditional contraband."

Thus, it declares, "conditional contraband."

"In consequence," it continues of the consumption of the inhabitants of a belligerent, which is universally considered legitimate in international law, is practically rendered illusory, whereby the incomplex to the contraband and in the international law, is practically rendered illusory, whereby the in-pany in turn leased it to Prince von Bluccher. The island has been inspected, Mr. McKenna said, and no evidence was found of military preparations. The authorities of Guernsey have been asked to take steps to terminate the lease of the German firm and the case was reported to the police.

Martin said his wife was eighteen years old, and was the daughter of J. W. Hitt, of Basic City. She has a sister in Charlottesville, but telegraphic inquiries to both of these places failed to locate her. She is described as being rather tall, of dark complexion, wearing a brown coat and skirt and a black hat. Martin said he had married his wife about eighteen months ago.

of right to seize a vessel "during its entire voyage, if carriage of contraband has taken place under false shipping directions," declaring that neutral shipping is thus "exposed to constant chicane." Further, Germany complains that under the British order in council "the right of seizure on account of blockade running is unduly extended."

Another charge is that "British naval forces have seized on merchant vessels salling under the Dutch, Norwegian or Italian flags, German subjects liable to do military service," in doing which, it is claimed, "they not only have violated the established principles of international law, as expressed in the Declaration of London, but also infringed on an act of their own legislation."

It adds that "in the same manner the French naval forces have captured German prisoners liable to do military on neutral merchant vessels especially on Dutch and Spanish to | Bels."
